The way people work is constantly changing. Today's new office landscape demands diverse, adaptable workspaces that optimize space and help people work smarter. More collaboration, flexibility, and personal control are the new norms – and the private office is no exception. Suite is the new casegoods line that addresses these changes while still maintaining the timeless elegance and beauty found in fine wood furniture.

- + Suite provides more than a private office. It helps people do more with less. With a statement of line designed to enhance space efficiency, Suite works hard to keep costs down.
- + It is a comfortable, personalized, efficient space that easily transforms for user needs, accommodating multiple workstyles in a condensed footprint.
- + With its deliberate attention to refined details, Suite commands a level of stature through the richness of veneer without sacrificing functionality.

Designed by Steffen Lipsky, Haworth Design Studio

Chameleons are a focus of inspiration for Suite; they are adaptable within their environment and shift continuously throughout the day. Haworth was looking to create a product line with a breadth of elements to create flexibility and allow tailoring to reflect an individual's personality while fully engaging the organization's brand identity.

Suite was designed to have an additional level of three-dimensional play between elements in foreground, background, and sliding elements that reveal or conceal. This dimensional variation, combined with lines through irregular softened shapes on main tables, facilitate a natural gather of people instead of driving hierarchy.

- Horizontal lines, minimal hardware, and a lighter scale application presents a clean look that further closes the gap between home and office.
- Suite's unique features allow for the private office to easily transform for varying workstyles.
